Re: Computer Associates International, Inc. ("CA")

Dear Mr. Lutin:

This responds to your August 16 letters to Lewis Ranieri and me.

CA regularly provides the appropriate, required information to its shareholders, including information disclosed in SEC annual and quarterly filings, proxy materials, press releases, and statements by CA executives. Through the Company's Investor Relations Department, CA routinely responds to requests for information by individual shareholders, as legally appropriate. If there is specific additional information that you believe CA should provide to all of its shareholders, please let me know, so that we can consider whether the public disclosure of such information is appropriate under the law.

That said, to the extent that you believe that CA should provide any shareholder, even the holder of a single share, with "whatever information" any such shareholder requests, you would run afoul of the Federal securities laws and Delaware law, and go far beyond the disclosure practices of other U.S. public companies. Indeed, suggesting such an open-ended obligation of disclosure is not in the best interests of CA and its shareholders.

When all is said and done, your complaint is that CA will not enter into a special relationship with you. As we have previously said, CA cannot selectively disclose confidential Company information to certain shareholders or their representatives.

Very truly yours,

Kenneth V. Handal

General Counsel
